The Revolt of Samos (441-439 BC)

why this event?

- crucial event in the history of the “Pentekontaetia”
- good test case for the work on the “Digital Pentekontaetia”
- interesting collection of fragmentary sources on the revolt

- work supported by the College of the Holy Cross (Department of Classics) + published papers
- Digital Pentekontaetia at the University of Leipzig (Humboldt Chair of Digital Humanities)

The Revolt of Samos

The aim of this section is to provide a test case for designing a "synoptical representation" of primary sources. By this expression we mean a way to identify chunks of separate sources corresponding to one another and align them. We have chosen the example of the Athenian suppression of the revolt of Samos (441-439 BC) because we have literary and epigraphical texts that can be aligned together.

The sources are grouped into different pages corresponding to different topics on the revolt of Samos. They are aligned in columns and it is also possible to highlight source passages where we have same or similar words about the same subject (click on this symbol ). The texts are presented both in the original Greek language and in English translation, and they are provided with links to the full TEI XML digital sources published in the Perseus Digital Library or to print edition pdf files stored in Internet Archive or Google Books.

For a collection of sources on the revolt of Samos, see G.F. Hill, Sources for Greek History between the Persian and Peloponnesian Wars, Oxford 1897, pp. 137-146, and its revised edition by Meiggs and Andrewes (Oxford 1951).

COLLECTING QUOTATIONS BY TOPIC:
DEGREES OF PRESERVATION AND TRANSTEXTUAL
RELATIONS AMONG GENRES*

Abstract: This paper aims at exploring many issues concerning the difficult task of collecting quotations and text re-uses of lost historians. The subject is addressed not by author or by work, but focusing on a topic and discussing sources that belong to different genres and are characterized by different degrees of preservation. The test-case is constituted by the sources on the revolt of Samos (440-439 BC).

The aim of this paper is to address some questions concerning the difficult task of collecting fragments — i.e. quotations and textual re-uses — of lost texts of Classical prose writers. With this goal in mind, I am not going to talk about a fragmentary author or about a modern edition of fragments, but I will present my reflections focusing on a topic and gathering ancient sources about it. The rationale for this choice is to collect evidence that belongs to different genres and is characterized by different degrees of preservation. The ultimate purpose is to explore connections among sources and point to a relation type perspective, which is one of the most challenging issues when dealing with quotations¹.

This comparative analysis is the first step in examining three basic aspects of fragments of ancient works, combining both an endotextual and an exotextual approach: (1) the contribution of fragments to our knowledge of a certain topic, (2) the reasons for quoting them, and (3) their role inside the context of transmission². This means investigating their level of distance from the original text, which is lost, and the intention of the author who has selected, excerpted, and quoted a portion of the original text in a new (con)text. At the same time, gathering ancient sources by topic enables us to put together fragments that modern editors have been forced, for more or less compelling reasons, to collect and classify into distinct categories, although the differences among their supposed genres are often not so evident and therefore definable.

* I express my warmest thanks to Guido Schepens and Stefan Schorn for giving me the opportunity to discuss with them the contents of this paper and for their precious suggestions. I am also very grateful to Thomas R. Martin and D. Neel Smith for a preliminary discussion about the role of new editors of fragments of ancient literature.

Citazioni e dinamiche testuali
L'intertestualità e la storiografia greca frammentaria

In una lunga sezione tematica dell'introduzione al volume Greek Historiography Simon Hornblower introduce il concetto di intertestualità e ne verifica le possibili applicazioni al campo della storiografia greca¹. Lo studioso definisce questo approccio come un problema di interrelazione implicita o esplicita, e consapevole o meno, tra uno storico e l'altro e tra le opere di storiografia e gli altri generi espressivi. La questione è affrontata citando alcuni esempi particolarmente dibattuti oltre a quelli trattati nei saggi raccolti nel volume, e cioè il rapporto tra Ecateo, Erodoto e Tuciddide, le fonti di Strabone e la sua conoscenza dell'opera tucididea, le fonti di Arriano, il rapporto tra Polibio e Tuciddide, il metodo di lavoro di Diodoro e di Plutarco e l'influenza dell'epica omerica sulla storiografia del V secolo².

Le riflessioni di Hornblower evidenziano alcune questioni fondamentali della moderna ricerca storiografica sulle quali vale la pena soffermarsi brevemente:

Anzitutto la storiografia non può essere considerata come una semplice διαδοχή, ossia una successione lineare di autori, perché è molto difficile valutare il grado di consapevolezza di uno

¹ S. HORNBLOWER (ed.), Greek Historiography, Oxford 1994, pp. 54-72 (Section IV: Intertextuality and the Greek historians).

² I saggi del volume riguardano queste tematiche: Polibio e i suoi predecessori (P. Derow); Erodoto e la religione (J. Gould); Erodoto su Alessandro I di Macedonia (E. Badian); tecniche narrative in Tuciddide (S. Hornblower); il mondo di Teofrasto (P.M. FRASER); la tradizione sulla Prima Guerra Sacra (J. Davies); Diodoro e le sue fonti (K.S. Sacks); la tradizione sulle Guerre Persiane nell'impero romano (A. Spawforth).
